Are the British Different?

There is really little doubt that the British are different from other members of the European community as some recent statistics demonstrate.

Take marriage for instance. Nowhere else in Europe – except for Portugal – are there fewer marriages, proportionally speaking. Yet Britain has the highest divorce rate – almost half of all marriages break up. Italian couples are six times more likely to stick together. Of those who divorce, British men seem far more willing to take another chance than divorced women.

However, Britain does pretty well in other areas. It is the second safest place in Europe to drive a car, beaten only by Norway. There are many more fatal road accidents in France, Spain and Portugal. Also, the reputation the British have for being work-shy is not confirmed by statistics. At an average of forty-four hours a week we beat even the hard-working Germans by four hours. Unfortunately, there is a downside to this. Britain and Holland share the worst rates of job absenteeism in the whole of Europe. The Dutch and the British, so alike in many senses, differ clearly in one area: we lock up twice as many people as they do.

1. Which country seems to have the most secure marriages?

- A Italy
- B Portugal
- C Britain

2. Divorced men in Britain

- A usually get married again.
- B are more likely to marry again than divorced women.
- C generally re-marry women who have not already been married.

3. Which of these countries has the worst road accident record?

- A France
- B Norway
- C Britain

4. Which of these statements is true?

- A Britain is tougher on criminals than Holland.
- B Britain has Europe's best road safety record.
- C British people work fewer hours than the Germans.

5. Which people appear to be the most conscientious workers?

- A The Dutch
- B The Germans
- C The British

II. On a travel programme, you will hear a man, Jeremy Clark, reporting from Mapé, a tropical island where people go on holiday. For questions 9-18, complete the sentences.

..... / 10

Jeremy has spent a weekend 9 on the holiday island of Mapé, and he'd like to stay longer.

Most tourists arrive at Mapé in what's called a watertaxi 10 which connects it to another island.

On one side of Jeremy's hotel there is the beach; on the other there is a (noisy) carpark 11.

The best thing about Port Mapé is the wonderful (evening) market 12 which is held in the evening.

Jeremy travelled around the island on a motorbike 13 which is hired.

The northern part of the island has both beautiful mountain 14 and frightening roads.

Jeremy was particularly impressed by the colours 15 on the fish he saw from the beach.

In a bay near Jeremy's hotel, it's possible to do windsurfing and diving 16, but not other sports.

Jeremy describes the locally produced food as both simple and fresh 17.

Jeremy mentions marmalade 18 as a type of food unavailable on the island.

▶▶ PART 1

You will hear people talking in eight different situations.
For questions 1–8, choose the best answer, A, B or C.

According to a recent survey, text messages have superseded phone calls as the most common use for a mobile phone among young people. More than eight out of ten people under the age of 25 are more likely to send someone a text message than call. At the other end of the scale, just 14 percent of those aged over 55 said they preferred to text. Sending a birthday greeting was the most popular use of text.

Good evening, and welcome to a special edition of 'Driving Force', devoted this week to the issue of car security. Why is there an increase in the number of vehicles being stolen, despite technological advances in security systems? Can a stolen vehicle be tracked electronically? Do steering wheel locks really work? And with me to discuss these issues is Betty Crawford, designer of the new Vortex GT6, the car which was recently declared car of the year.

Terry, I need you to do something for me. You remember the enquiry we had from Head Office about cost-cutting measures? Yes, they want a summary of not more than 500 words describing our basic attitude – which is that we can't cut costs without reducing essential services. No, I'd much rather you faxed it, and let me check it before you send it off.

A: John, hello! I haven't seen you since we went out at Christmas!
B: That's right, Audrey! What a great evening! I really hadn't expected to enjoy myself so much.
A: Oh, I thought you'd like it. You just haven't had enough opportunities to see really good plays in a first-class theatre.

B: I think you're right. I expected it to be really boring, but it was one of the most exciting things I've ever seen!

Aunt Maude was rather a rebel for her time. She grew up just after the Great War, when women weren't really expected to have any profession. At the time the common belief in upper middle-class families was that decent, respectable girls couldn't have a career in show business, so her parents were absolutely furious when she told them she had enrolled at drama school and was leaving home!

A: Amanda, I got mum's present, but are you sure she's going to like it? A guide to Italy?

B: But it's a guide to the cooking in different parts of the country. You know how mum likes to experiment with cooking, and she's been getting really keen on Italian cooking.

B: Yes, she can read about the cooking and then try out the dishes on us ...

A: That's right; there's a recipe section in the back of the book. She'll love it!

Good evening ladies and gentlemen, and welcome to Gallery Multiplex. Please check your tickets for the start times of the films, and make sure you go to the right section of the cinema. This evening we have Eve and Adam just starting in Screen 1, and at 18.45 Hurricane starts in Screen 7. In just over 20 minutes, at 18.55, Racing Fever begins in Screen 6, and at the same time Details of the Fall starts in Screen 5 ...

I remember the magazine used to come out on Fridays, and every Friday after school I'd race round to the newsagent's and buy a copy, and then spend all evening reading it. It was aimed at girls exactly like me; it gave you ideas how to choose accessories, how to wear make up and had information about the latest trends in fashion. The only thing it didn't have was interviews with pop stars and free posters!

II

Interviewer: Our reporter, Jeremy Clark, has been on the move again. We caught up with him under the palm trees on the tropical island called Mapé. He's sent us this report.

Jeremy: If you're thinking of having the holiday of a lifetime then I recommend coming here. To appreciate it fully, you need a week or a fortnight, preferably a month. But even after only a weekend, I can't see myself ever wanting to go home. It really is beautiful. Mapé has no airport though, and international flights arrive on a larger island nearby. You then take what's known as a water taxi to get to Mapé. That adds about another hour on to your journey time, and if there are delays, it can be even longer. There is a helicopter service, but it's expensive and so it isn't included in the price of most holidays to the island.

My hotel, The Palm Beach, is as good as its name. Step outside and you're on the beach. Take a few more steps and you're in the water. What more could anyone wish for? Well, if it's perfection you're after then I suppose you could ask for the car park to be moved a bit further away from the other side of the hotel. If you've got a room on that side, it can be a bit noisy at times.

Another good thing about the position of the hotel is that you can easily drive into Port Mapé, the main town, if you want a change. We're not talking bright city lights and discos here – just a small town with a limited number of shops, but it has a great evening market, which is the highlight of any visit – full of people, very cheap things to buy and lots going on – more like a street theatre in some ways.

The scenery and the driving are spectacular. I hired a motorbike one day and drove around. Cars and jeeps are also available. For some reason, however, everyone tends to drive down the middle of the road whichever way they're going, so you never know what you might meet coming round a corner – very bad for the nerves. And at the northern end of the island, unlike my end, there are mountains, which are lovely, but some very frightening twisty roads. I tell you, I was glad to get back to the peace and quiet of my beach.

And talking about the beach, you know when you look at a holiday brochure and see pictures of idyllic-looking places and you think nothing can really be as good as that? Well let me tell you, it is! There are palm trees at the back for a bit of shade when it all gets too hot, but watch out for falling coconuts! And then there's the white sand and an absolutely clear blue sea. And if you're interested in wildlife, you can see all sorts of seabirds of all shapes and sizes. And the fish are really spectacular. I've never seen such incredible colours! You don't even need a mask or anything – you can just stand there in the shallow water and watch them at your feet.

There are no water sports at the hotel, but if you walk round the headland to the next bay, you'll find diving or windsurfing are on offer. There's not a huge variety, because water-skiing and power boats are both prohibited on the island, and the conditions are not right for sailing.

And finally, the food in the hotel restaurant: simple, fresh and, as far as I can see, most of it's local, from the island. We have lots of seafood and fruit. Don't ask me what it is – most of it is new to me. I thought my local supermarket in London sold a wide variety of stuff, but it's nothing compared to what you get here. It's true that some things like chocolate and ice cream are rather expensive here, but the only thing you can't get for some reason is marmalade. Anyway, I'm not complaining, unlike some people. The couple on the next table to mine haven't got used to the laid-back way of doing things here. It's true that the waiters in the restaurant are quite slow, but who cares, what's the hurry? Give these holidaymakers a few more days in paradise, and I'm sure they'll calm down – it's that sort of place.
